Welcome to the second gathering of Black Communities: A Conference for Collaboration! While the first Black Communities Conference held in April 2018 exceeded our wildest dreams, we are convinced that BlackCom2019 is going to be even more dynamic, energetic, engaging and important.

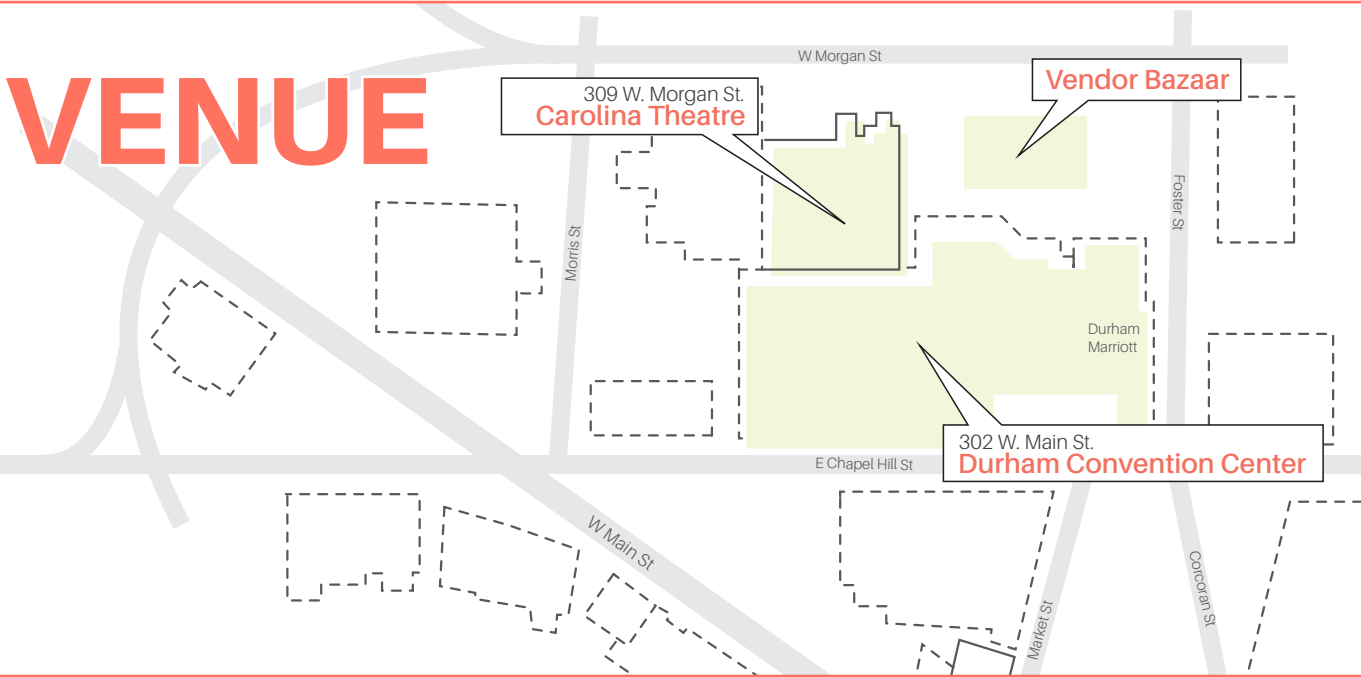

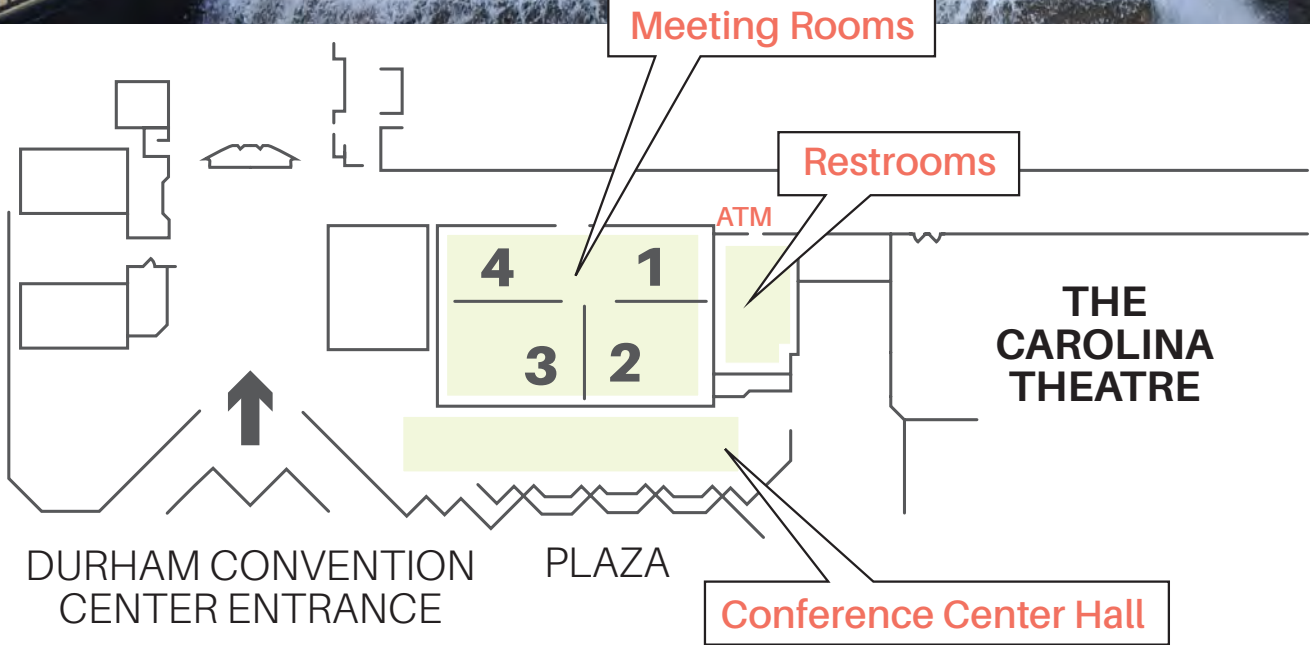

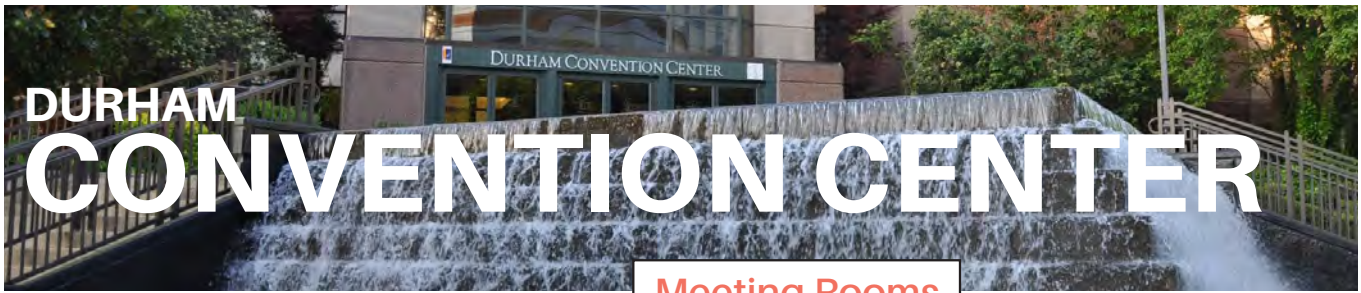

Part of the reason we know that BlackCom2019 will be great is because of you. More than 700 of you committed to being here. Over 250 of you sent us incredible proposals that pack our agenda with workshops, panels, pop-ups, short talks, films and more. Close to thirty of you are coming from outside the United States, from places like Haiti, Colombia, Nigeria and Brazil. From Haiti alone, we have more than 10 professionals and activists who, as presenters, are contributing to the program's richness. From across North Carolina, Black business owners and artists are bringing their energy to make the Africana Vendors Market and Food Truck Rodeo possible. Six accomplished leaders in business, research and cultural heritage will headline our plenary sessions. In so many diverse ways and from so many corners of the globe, you are sharing your expertise and investment in Black communities, and you have shown that you are ready to collaborate.

The extensive opportunities for collaboration are another reason we are excited about this year's event. Indeed, the Black Communities Conference is equal parts sharing, learning and collaborating. Recall that our goal is to connect people who have deep experience with Black communities and are committed to elevating Black experiences. We have built in ways to make sure that these connections happen. Beyond the numerous informational and interactional sessions on the program, we also have workshops dedicated to bringing people together to explore how they can partner on various efforts. Please take advantage of our collaboration workshops and our closing plenary to enhance your opportunities to meet new people and explore how you might work together on a project that helps Black communities thrive.

As co-chairs, we have indicated before that we believe now is the time to bring people together for this purpose. It has been said that people of African descent are living in contradictory times; so much has moved forward for us in significant ways while so much continues to challenge us deeply. You are all experts in Black experiences, so we don't need to detail what those advances and trials are. But, what better way to confront our present realities, make sense of them and collaborate on finding solutions to them than by bringing together people who care deeply about Black futures?

For Blackcom2019, we offer this as your charge: for the next three days, share and connect with one another for the future of Black communities. Thank you for joining us.
