Black Communities: A Conference for Collaboration

<http://blackcommunities.unc.edu>

We are delighted that you are joining us in Durham, home to the Hayti neighborhood, North Carolina Mutual and M&F Bank, North Carolina Central University, and countless other facets of a rich history of Black culture, power and influence!

The inspiration for this conference was a 2015 symposium that brought together leaders from eight historic Black towns and academics at UNC-Chapel Hill. That convening focused on historic preservation and community economic development and resulted in a number of productive partnerships. Its success inspired us to imagine how we could encourage collaboration between academics and Black communities on an international level.

At every stage in organizing this conference, we have been humbled by the overwhelmingly positive response. Hundreds of community members and academics submitted excellent proposals. Dozens of graduate students enthusiastically volunteered their time. Presenters have traveled from four countries and over 30 states. More than 20 sponsors have stepped up. And now, more than 600 conference attendees will participate in this endeavor.

The next three days offer a full slate of workshops, oral presentations, panel discussions, working groups, tours, popup presentations and films. Each day also features a plenary session with acclaimed and distinguished researchers, artists and elected community officials. Together, these activities explore Black community life to the fullest.

As you take advantage of all that this event has to offer, we ask that you help us achieve the central conference objective: to facilitate partnerships and initiatives among Black communities, researchers, activists and others. Through dedicated networking space, working groups and post-presentation Q&A sessions, the conference is designed to help you connect. We cannot stress enough our hope that you will take this seriously and pursue opportunities to collaborate in work that supports Black communities.

We look forward to an exciting three days. Thank you for joining us.
